

Right Cuisse

Date

1500s with modern restorations

Primary Maker

Western European

Medium

steel and leather

Description

Like the armharness, both cuisses have been heavily reworked and composited. The L and R mainplates are not by the same hand, as indicated by the very different execution of the central crease. The extension plates below the mainplates on both sides have probably been inserted at a later stage of compositing. The decoration is largely or entirely spurious.
